The 9 Most Racist Disney Characters

18/11/2007 à 19h15

These old Disney movies are a little bit like your aging Uncle Frank. Honestly, he means well when he points out that Will Smith is “well-spoken.” It’s just that he, like the assemblage of clips below, dates from a time when people were unfairly characterized by their ethnic background (the acceptable methods are, of course, religion, geography, sexual preference and income).

#9. The Merchant from Aladdin

The opening musical sequence from the hugely popular 1992 animated film had to be edited due to protest from Arab-American groups for saying about the Middle East what most of us were merely thinking.

Lesson Learned:
The Middle East is a barren wasteland where the justice system runs on a clear and simple limb-removal policy.

suite